Healing – Electro-crystal Therapy

ELECTRO-CRYSTAL THERAPY

WHEREAS HEALERS LIKE BARBARA BRENNAN CAN LOOK AT A PERSON AND SEE THEIR AURIC FIELD, HARRY OLDFIELD ACTUALLY VIDEOS IT AND SAVES THE IMAGE ON A COMPUTER DISK. HIS ENTHUSIASM AND ENERGY GIVE HIM THE AIR OF A SLIGHTLY ECCENTRIC INVENTOR. WE CAUGHT UP WITH HARRY SIX YEARS AFTER OUR ORIGINAL INTERVIEW WAS PUBLISHED. FINDING LITTLE EVIDENCE OF ECCENTRICITY, BUT PLENTY OF INVENTIVENESS, WE WERE INTRODUCED TO HIS NEW ELECTRO-TRANSPLANT THERAPY.

Can you define electro-crystal therapy?

Crystals and gemstones have been used naturally for thousands of years, and have always been sacred to healing, acting as 'condensers' for healing energies.

Electro-crystal therapy involves electro-magnetically stimulating crystals that have electrical properties, like quartz, topaz, tourmaline for example, and some semi-precious stones such as agates. The crystals are placed in a conductive liquid within a special flexible silicon tube. An electromagnetic generator is used to stimulate the crystals which then give off enhanced vibrations. They set up a resonance on a mechanical level - that of chemical vibration. Also, if you stimulate them mechanically they will give off electricity. It's a two-way thing.

The pure electromagnetic field, without the crystals, and with relaxing and stimulating frequencies, can have good effects in its own right, but only in a very narrow band of illness - pain and inflammation. The crystals boost the intensity, and the spectrum of healing increases dramatically.

Does this generate an electromagnetic field as portrayed on a Kirlian photo?

Indeed. 16 years ago, I modified the Kirlian generator, lowered the voltage and broadened the frequency to see what I could do about resonating those stones. The frequencies I now use range from one cycle per second right up to 45,000 cps.

How does this therapy affect the body?

Basically, we locate the injured or diseased area, but firstly I like to go to the chakra point of the zone that is being affected - the chakra is usually 'out of synch'.

We find out from our scanning methods whether or not the person's subtle field is in a state of energetic, high 'flux' or in a state of low-energy 'density', and we can stimulate or tranquillise according to the chakra zone in the vicinity of the particular problem.

So you have the frequencies for each chakra. Does that vary with each person?

It's a broad frequency, of course, so it's not individual to the person, but we have the Upanishads and other works from India which mention petals. Petals are symbols of frequency.

So if you're tuning someone in to that frequency then you need to put it on as high as it will go?

Exactly. That's why I have extended the top end. Especially in working with crown chakra problems, on a mental and emotional level.

Are you really saying that the chakras are related directly to the cycles of frequency?

Oh, absolutely. They are - how can I put it? - vortices of energy, and their vibratory resonances are most important for maintaining health. Think of them as tuning forks going off at different frequencies. However, if a tuning fork gets tarnished or cracked, its note alters. When that's happening in an energy sense - a state which is usually brought about by a deep spiritual, emotional or external physical interference, it will alter the resonance of the chakras.

Therefore one can use another tuning fork - crystals, or a healer's hands, to put the frequency back into as near a proper order as possible.

So you're projecting the particular frequency that the chakra should be at and the chakra says 'Oh, I remember, that's the right frequency'.

That's it. Just as when a clockmaker will put one 'out of synch' grandfather clock in the middle of several that are working well. After a few days it will synchronise itself with the clocks without any interference from the clockmaker. So through harmonic resonance it would get back into synch. It makes sense - when you're sad you tend to mix with happier company for instance.

Can you tell us about any new developments in the PIP (Polycontrast Interface Photography) scans?

We've certainly improved on our resolution, our clarity, and I think our sensitivity. Before, you saw some very chunky 'pixels' - without subtle colour differences between one place and another. When I demonstrate it in a minute you will see that there are much more subtle colour graduations, using a larger colour scale.

And you use a video camera connected to a computer?

Interfacing with a computer, yes. With a special program that analyses the light that's coming off the person.

And there are frequencies related to the colours so you can tell straight away if something is wrong?

We can indeed. The intensity of the colour graduations also provides us with information on the specific problem.

So what is the video camera actually picking up on?

It's light. Sensitives, like Barbara Brennan, see. I don't have such gifts, so that's probably why I explored Kirlian photography and then developed this - if I had the gift I'd be satisfied. Without it, I wanted to know how this phenomenon of seeing 'auric' colours happens.

When I look at you, I'm not seeing you at all. That sounds strange, but what I'm seeing is the light reflected off you. I am certain, as anybody is who has the gift of 'vision', that we are giving off subtle energy forces which can be perceived at varying levels of intensity and colour by sensitives.

So you've got a human being who's generating a force field. You've got the ambient light that's coming in. As it bounces off, the intensity of that light is being interfered with and changed. I've set up the software program and the hardware to see these changes in the minutest detail, which the ordinary human eye does not normally perceive.

A clairvoyant once looked at the video screen and said to me: 'This is factual, what you've got here. It's the same as how I see, but it's very much like watching a cartoon of the reality of what I'm seeing.' I thought that was a very good way of expressing where we are at. We are at the cartoon stage. We haven't gone into cinemascope yet.

As I understand it, one of your new developments is that you can actually store frequencies from healthy areas of a patient's body.

This method we call Electro-Transplant Therapy. We talked about the frequencies of the chakras, we can also set our crystal machine to counter the frequencies of various illnesses. Of course, if someone asks me 'Have you got the exact frequencies for that patient, perfectly matched?' I have to answer 'No'. We have a wide spectrum, and the crystal resonances will get through for healing purposes, but they can't be perfectly matched because they're not human frequencies - they're coming from the crystals and their electromagnetic fields. In a sense it's like trying to 'encourage' the right biological frequencies back into the human being.

You made a reference there to actually countering the frequencies of particular illnesses?

Yes. We have found particular frequencies very useful for certain categories of illness.

Saying that, I don't like to put individual patients into categories. For example, a disease like ME, or arthritis, shouldn't be termed a singular disease. We have arthritises, and we have MEs, depending on the individual. Each case has to be tailored towards that individual's needs.

We have found, though, that in the initial stages, when we are just trying to clarify things with the patient, certain frequencies can be very useful for different disease states. But I am always thinking, 'What will be the most accurate frequency for this person?'

Well, we have the human being who is a healer, and I believe that that healer is imparting the right frequency to the patient as best as he or she can, to get their energies up, or to a certain level.

What we are always trying to do is restore the balance of that chakra, the balance of that organ, the balance of that etheric body.

Can you tell us about your exciting new development of cloning a person's energy pattern?

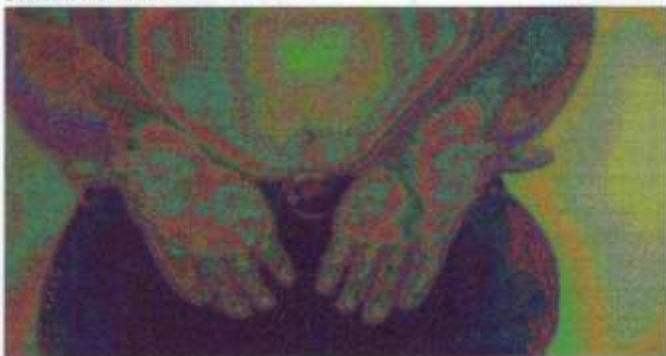

Well, I've always thought that a healer is one way of getting frequencies into a patient, but that the best frequencies to put into patients would be their own. What about their own frequency? Let's say you have a localised illness or an illness that's confined to a certain quadrant of the body. We take a normal area that we know is in good order, with no injuries, no diseases, and we take off the vibrations from that area, store them digitally, process them digitally in the computer, amplify the electrical signal from the body, and then play it back into the diseased site at a much greater volume. We literally try and 'shout' it back into operation.

As that person gets better, I would take another normal reference from them again, because their base note, their base frequency, if you like, has improved. When people first come to me, they arrive with their illness full-blown, so their overall energy cannot be vibrating at a truly healthy rate. So taking normal references as the patient improves is part of the practice.

So you might have a computer disk with someone's 'frequency history' on it?

Yes, indeed. I've got, if you like, their fingerprints on there. Where there's no normal part of the body to go to - for example, rheumatoid arthritis that's spread to every joint, or MS (although in that case the cartilage of the ear can be very useful, because it doesn't contain as much myelin, the nerve fibre insulation, as anywhere else) - we've used a sibling or a relative of the same gender, taken their healthy frequencies and put them back into the mother, say, or the ailing father. And sometimes vice versa, from the mother to the child. And of course there's empathy and love there already, so that can be very effective.

For example, I had a case where one kidney was failing and the other one was working at a very hyper rate. That second kidney didn't have a truly normal signal, so I got it from the young man's mother (the father wasn't on the scene unfortunately and there were no brothers or sisters). I took the signal from her kidney and put it cautiously into the young man, and his renal output was fantastic after that. So I saved his kidney and probably prevented a long life of dialysis for him, waiting for a transplant.

It's very early days yet, but these are some of my observations so far. One day, in schools, we could be taking energy signatures from kids who are at the peak of their health, storing them on magnetic material, and keeping the disks in a vault, so that at any time in their lives when they are feeling poorly, we can transplant that young, healthy signal back into them. I know that's going into Asimov-style science fiction, but there we are.

"The video shows my patient's hand holding the crystal with a little white light that shines on the crystal. This has nothing to do with a reflection, because this light moves. As it appeared I said 'Keep your hand completely still', and the light started to move on top of the crystal, independently. Her hand is perfectly still and I'm not moving the camera, and yet the entity is moving on top of the crystal. She looked at the monitor and I looked at the monitor and we were dumb-struck. Suddenly, as it realised we could both see it, it went back into the crystal and interfered with my program. On the screen it says 'Unidentified Instruction' at this point. It had crashed my program!"

It appears that, after death, a certain amount of our energy as humans lingers. Could you talk about this?

Yes, a presence, when a being has a very strong attachment to the earth realm and the earth frequencies. I have seen some strange things in PIP pictures: shadows, faces, shapes. It is, I think, a window onto another world. Its primary objective is to help my clients with their health and energetic problems, but I've seen attachments - I should call them entities - attached to human beings, causing trouble. In fact, when we have been putting a lot of high energy into people and these things finally detach, the mental and physical being of that patient suddenly improves, and I don't think it's coincidental. I feel that these are forces that may have once been human, or perhaps have never been human at all. I have no way of knowing. And they can actually interfere with the living.

In view of your faith, did you find such discoveries difficult to integrate?

As a practising Christian, I have had a problem with that in the past. In fact, though, we hear about them right the way through the Bible and many other ancient manuscripts - divine messengers, many of them anthropomorphic. Beings, beings of light. Whether or not these were once human is debatable, but all I know is that I'm convinced of their existence now. I never used to be, but I am now. Working with PIP and with my patients has changed my mind. I'm much more open-minded than I used to be!

To actually see interesting things on video is quite remarkable. We have seen, for example, crystal entities which look amoeboid, but which appear to be intelligent. When one of these realised we could see it, it crashed my computer program. You'll see the words 'unidentified instruction' appear on the screen. It also caused interference bands on the screen. On top of this, coming from within the creature itself, there was a sort of 'banded energy' - striped energy which started to appear as bands, and we found later on that this was some kind of rudimentary communication with us.

Not all crystals have this. I believe that the ones that do come from very special places and make themselves known to special individuals. So I was very lucky to get a special individual and the right crystals together at the same time and place.
